How sizing verification works

Dominion jackets are produced in standard ready-to-wear sizes and are designed with a tailored fit. They are not made to measure. The information you provide helps us identify the most appropriate available size.

Your selected size remains provisional until the final production measurements are available. At that stage, David, our seamstress May and Reilly will review the final jacket measurements alongside your body measurements, reference jacket information and photos. We will then either confirm your selected size or contact you if we recommend a different available size. You will have an opportunity to review and approve the final sizing before your jacket proceeds to production.

Sleeve length

Sleeve length can only be customized through the paid sleeve-alteration option. If you did not select an alteration but believe you may need one, please let us know. We can review the sleeve length with you and arrange payment before production if an alteration is recommended.

Please note: Jackets with customized sleeve lengths are final sale and are not eligible for return or exchange. If you choose to proceed without submitting sizing information and photos or completing the sizing-verification process, the size selected at checkout will be treated as final and will not be eligible for return or exchange due to fit.
